

On the troll with Kroll

If Czech politics were a suspense novel, this is where someone would get run over by a stolen car on a dark street. Foreign Minister Karel Schwarzenberg has hired Kroll, a serious set of sleuths, to look into Jiří Čunek's finances. Imagine the disaster if this turned into a movement! An objective, outside analysis of other murky deals - such as the offshore Gripen accounts, the Tatra/Praga 1.3% solution, the 20 deaths in the heating-oil fraud, to name a few - would actually bring some results. Kroll could be kept busy for decades. But, hello!, this is Czech reality. Investigations aren't supposed to resolve anything. So that leaves just two options. First, Kroll miraculously finds nothing suspicious, like so many forensic auditors before it. Or, second, Kroll confirms what everyone already knows about Čunek, but Čunek refuses to leave the cabinet anyway, forcing Schwarzenberg to do so. And then Kroll rides off into the sunset, never to be seen in these parts again.
