

A daily e-mail bulletin of Czech wit & wisdom. For your free subscription, write to subscribe@fsfinalword.com

It's a new day

It's 2028, and Nguyen Thi Hoi has been elected president of the Bohemian-Moravian Republic (Bohмор, for short). Hoi, born of a Czech mother and Vietnamese father, won 95% of the Vietnamese vote and the support of 43% of whites, 66% of Romany, 78% of Jews, 89% of Muslims, and 66% of the under-30 vote. He ran on a change agenda, promising to reintegrate the country into the European community after years of rightwing imperialism and financial profligacy. His victory is the most significant event in Bohмор politics since 2008, when the greencard law led to a historic rise in immigration. Eight years later the name of the country was changed to Bohмор, when it was deemed that the "Czech" Republic was ethnically insensitive and no longer reflected the melting-pot culture. Although Hoi won only 52% of the popular vote in this year's election, he vowed to be the president of all Bohморans.

Know Prague?
Know it better...

www.inyourpocket.com

