

Jirka to the rescue

It's payback time. One by one, Mirek Topolánek and his loyalists are lining up to blame Václav Klaus and Pavel Bém for actively working to bring down the government. In a situation where 70% of Czechs (according to Median-MFD) didn't want the government to fall, blaming Klaus and the increasingly unpopular Bém could be an especially effective strategy. All Topolánek needs is a catchy label - maybe the "Klaus blitzkrieg" - for drawing a parallel with the "Sarajevo assassination" that brought down Klaus a decade ago. Jirka Paroubek might not realize it yet, but he risks becoming collateral damage for allowing Klaus to do this to the country at the moment of its greatest international stardom. Paroubek might be able to save his skin by agreeing with Topolánek on the formation of a new, temporary ODS-KDU-Green government. Of course, Topolánek might have to get rid of Ivan Langer, Martin Buršík and Renata Vesecká, but it would be a small price to pay for repairing some of the damage caused by Klaus & Co.
