Putinesque presidential system

Václav Klaus threw cold water in MFD today on the idea of direct presidential elections, saying that some candidates could use them to ratchet up the situation even worse than under a parliamentary vote. Speaking in MFD on Sat., Václav Havel said he doesn't think MPs will ever agree to a constitutional law for instituting a popular presidential vote. Would anyone ever allow such nice powers to choose the president to be taken away, he asked? Well, let's see. What did Havel give the Communists in order to get elected in 1989? The court system, immunity from prosecution, control of key companies.... As the CR moves closer to a Putin-like system after Klaus became the "guarantor" of the Nečas government yesterday, Parliament might soon be beseeching Klaus to run for a third term. Perhaps MPs could persuade him to run by making one of the requirements that the candidates have prior experience in the job.

Udání Tykače, Bobely a Pudila na ČEZ a EPH bylo Evropskou komisí smeteno ze stolu

08. 11. 2010 – 14:43

Evropská komise dle agentury Bloomberg ukončila veškeré šetření společností ČEZ a Energetický a průmyslový holding. Web motejlek.com podobný závěr předpokládal. Podnět k prověření zadala především skupina Czech Coal, kterou vlastní Pavel Tykač, Vasil Bobela a Petr Pudil. Majitelé mosteckého uhlí žalovali, protože neunesli poměrně potupnou prohru v souboji o Elektrárny Opatovice. Přepad bruselských úředníků v kancelářích ČEZ a EPH proběhl loni v listopadu.
