She's a witch!

Literally overnight, Kristýna Kočí of VV went from being a party mascot to a witch whose evil spirit had to be exorcised for all eternity. In "Monty Python and the Holy Grail," the townsfolk knew a woman was a witch because, logically, if she burns, she's made of wood, and wood floats, as does a duck, so if she weighs the same as a duck, she's made of wood, and therefore a witch. Of course the punch line was that she did weigh the same as a duck. Proof for VV's leadership that Kočí was a witch came when she blew the whistle on Vít Bárta's in-house bribery. But the public needed more evidence. She provided it when she claimed that she placed the unopened envelope with the bribe into notarial escrow. The envelope was unopened, but she knew that it contained Kč 500,000. Hmm, maybe it weighed the same as a duck. She later admitted she opened the envelope, but it was too late to save her from the stake.
