Dual PMs

Petr Nečas said on "Krásný ztráty" that he thinks the PM position should be demythicized, because the premier is merely the country's No. 1 clerk. In his media appearances, Miroslav Kalousek takes Nečas up on this and routinely demeans the PM post - and Nečas himself - by stating that the prime minister is just one minister among equals. Kalousek even oversteps the Constitution at times by usurping Nečas's powers, most recently by deciding without Nečas's knowledge to file a lawsuit against the strike. The situation is clearly out of control and begs for a solution. Nečas won't dare fire Kalousek, so perhaps it's time for Václav Klaus to make it official by appointing Kalousek as co-prime minister. A pack of lawyers can be found to justify it under the Constitution (what isn't banned is allowed, right?). Or perhaps, for the country's sake, Kalousek could at least pretend for awhile that he's just one minister among equals.

A school where people want to be

The Prague British School has spacious, fully refurbished sites on both sides of Prague. Every day over 800 children aged 18 months to 18 years attend PBS for a quality British education.
