

King Miroslav's satraps

In the Persian Empire, the Satraps (or governors) were required to send tax revenue to the emperor but had considerable discretion to choose whom to tax and how much to keep to cover their own "expenses." During the reign of King Miroslav (as Jiří Štický of MFD aptly christened the CR's de facto potentate), the satraps at the tax offices have the power to forgive vast amounts in penalties (Kč 31bn just in the area of state subsidies, as noted by HN). Under a law passed this week by Parliament, other satraps working for Miroslav will have the authority to approve the "good causes" that receive billions of crowns each year from gambling companies. Thanks to a cabinet exemption proposed by Miroslav, Arbitration Satrap Radek Šnábl will get to choose the legal team for lucrative solar lawsuits. You get the picture? As long as the FAÚ financial-analytical unit stays in the family at the ministry, no one but King Miroslav will have any idea how much the satraps are keeping for their own expenses and how much is being kicked up to the emperor.
