Pruning the elite, one by one

A recurrent theme in the Czech media is that the criminal elite are plundering the country and taking everyone else down with them. President Luboš Drobník of the Prague Business Club is one of numerous elite businessmen who have openly joined the protesters and are now preaching "best practices" in business and politics. In a recent interview on Czech Radio, he said that the corrupt system sucks in business-people who would otherwise behave honestly. Everybody from the large financial groups to small entrepreneurs are bothered by what is happening, he said, but nobody knows how to escape from the vicious circle. A listener took him to task for harboring the very kind of dishonest people in his club whom he is now railing against. He responded by saying that he can't reveal who his members are but that he can name two people who were kicked out of the club: Aleš Hušák and Vít Bárta.
