Who will be the next Czech dictator?

The timing of future monumental events is impossible to predict, but the trends are often clear to those willing to look objectively at what is happening. For at least 40 years, the West has been on a path to self-destruction, and politicians and business leaders have proven that they are unwilling or unable to take reasonable steps to reverse the trend. If we cannot count on our leaders in time of calm, we surely cannot count of them to do the right thing in time of crisis. People will take to the streets in increasing numbers, but the result will not be less theft by the criminal elite or better use of tax money. The political and business elite will instead respond with bludgeons, guns and, if necessary, tanks. The West is headed toward some form of dictatorship, whether it takes six months or six years to transpire. In the coming days and weeks, we'll explore several possibilities for who the next Czech dictator will be.
