The next Czech dictator - Kalousek?

The installation of dictatorship in the West is a gradual process. So gradual and insidious, in fact, that it will be welcomed by a large part of the population. Of all Czech politicians in executive functions, Finance Minister Miroslav Kalousek has the greatest dictatorial proclivities, and yet his young party has an approval rating of as much as 10-15%. His VAT trick, which makes more budget money available for theft, demonstrates to the criminal elite his eagerness to serve. If he successfully waters down the public-procurement proposal - because it would be "too expensive" to implement all those extra rules - he will be supporting a "typical Double Jan" amendment that further endears him to all the Janoušek and Jansta types. Kalousek will be their clear go-to man for when emergency measures need to be imposed. The question is: When the West chooses its dictators, who will do the choosing?
