Supra-political class wins elections

The Communists peacefully handed over power in 1989, and now they are trying peacefully to take it back. Their strong showing in the elections has overshadowed the fact that few protest candidates made it into the regional assemblies or second round of the Senate balloting. If you accept that the Communists are actually part of the Establishment and not a protest party, which has arguably been the case since at least 1948, the main outcome of the elections is the invalidation of the protest vote.

Those who oppose what is happening in the country, whether it is being done by ODS, ČSSD, TOP 09, the godfathers, the little godfathers or the criminal elite in general, either stayed at home or cast their ballot into a black hole. This is a fantastic outcome for those who make up the supra-political class. These are the rich and powerful who don't give a fig who is in power, as long as it is the Establishment parties.
