Pump, dump, blame Trump

The world is fighting on more fronts than at any time in 70 years, trade wars are threatening vast swathes of the planet, and the global financial oligopoly is trying to bring Iran, Russia and Turkey to their knees, yet stock markets are soaring. "Record-setting US stocks ignore yield curve's red flag," announced the FT yesterday. Czechs are mostly impervious to these events, in part because their own stock market was long ago crippled by insiderism, but their livelihood nevertheless depends on what is happening on global financial markets. Insiders have long understood what is going on. It can be summed up as, "Pump, dump, blame Trump." We're still in the pump phase. The Economist quoted Goldman Sachs analysts last week as saying the probability of a bubble in U.S. shares is one in five. Soon, perhaps quicker than you can say Lloyd Blankfein three times, starts the dump phase by insiders. And of course Donald Trump will be right there to take the blame.
