Rafaj's brain

Právo reported yesterday that the NCOZ crime squad explained in a search warrant how things worked at the ÚOHS antitrust office: Chair Petr Rafaj gave illegal instructions about how the first-round decisions should read to Eva Kubišová, who ran the office's public-procurement section, and she then gave instructions to her own subordinates in a way that assured that Rafaj's commands were fully followed. Kubišová's underlings weren't supposed to know that the orders were coming from Rafaj. This explains a lot, but there is an obvious missing link. A first-round antitrust ruling is no small matter. Even if there is criminal foresight and criminal intent, the ruling itself must get past Kubišová's staffers and hold up under legal scrutiny. A first-round ruling can't just be pulled out of thin air. Rafaj is no legal whiz, and it is highly doubtful that he was the author of the instructions he gave to Kubišová. If Karl Rove was George W. Bush's brain, who was Petr Rafaj's?
